General Information

This document contains the text of the Business Process Framework for context and more information please refer to “GB991 Core Frameworks Concepts and Principles” guidebook.

Preface

eTOM Business Process Framework

The eTOM or Business Process Framework is a reference framework for categorizing all the business activities used by an enterprise involved in delivering on-line Information, Communications and Entertainment services. This is done through definition of each area of business activity, in the form of process components or Process Elements that can be decomposed to expose progressive detail. These process elements can then be positioned within a model to show organizational, functional and other relationships, and can be combined within process flows that trace activity paths through the business.

The eTOM framework can serve as the blueprint for standardizing and categorizing business activities (or process elements) that will help set direction and the starting point for development and integration of Business and Operations Support Systems (BSS and OSS respectively). An important additional application for the eTOM framework is that it helps to support and guide work by TM Forum members and others to develop their solutions. It provides an industry-standard reference point, when considering internal process reengineering needs, partnerships, alliances, and general working agreements with other enterprises, and for suppliers into such enterprises, the eTOM framework outlines potential boundaries of process solutions, and the required functions, inputs, and outputs that must be supported by process solutions.

Introduction

This document contains the main text of eTOM for this domain. It is comprised of decompositions and descriptions of the process elements that make out this domain.

The focus of the Business Process Framework is on the business processes used by service providers, the linkages between these processes, and the use of Market, Product, Customer, Service, Resource, Business Partner, and Enterprise Management related information by multiple processes.

The decomposition starts with a top level process which is a Core Process that details the activity that takes place and describes all subsequent activities that occurs. Thereby this Core Process includes all of the information regarding the activity. Lower level processes also known as Task Processes are then describing a unique path of action and further detail the specific process. This is then repeated to lower level of granularly of up to seven levees.

At the start of each Level 2 process a diagram details all of its sub processes is placed. This diagram showers Level 3 process and the level 4 process below them in boxes where the same level boxes are side by side and the their child processes in side each box. Process that have further decomposition include another box in box diagram of level 5, 6 and 7 process if existing.

Process Associations and IDs

To aid understanding and navigation, each process described here has an associated indication.

Processes have been given a process ID throughout this document. The format of the numbering scheme work as follows:

.b.x.c.d.e where

- b: This digit is used to identify the originator of the process It is set to 1 if the process is the TMF original one, to 2 otherwise so if a company chooses to extended the Business Process Framework it can do so keeping the original numbering and extend as needed.
- x: Digit representing Domain
- c: Digit representing Level 2 process
- d: Digit representing Level 3 process
- e: Digit representing Level 4 process

The unique identifier thus associated with individual processes can thus be used to assist in locating individual processes.

Typographic Conventions

- A Business Process is represented by a decorator in form of an arrow located to the top right. A red dot decorator with the initial TMF indicates that this is a TM Forum Business Process. The color yellow background hints to the business layer.
